MEMORANDUM FOR: Director of Central Intelligence

FROM:

[REDACTED]
Director, Intelligence Community Staff

VIA:

John N. McMahon
Deputy Director of Central Intelligence

SUBJECT:

All-Source Assessment Process [REDACTED]

25X1

1. I would like to inform you of an on-going initiative by the Intelligence Community Staff designed to focus collection capabilities where they are most needed. In March 1982, the Office of Assessment and Evaluation, in conjunction with the collection discipline offices, initiated an experiment in all-source assessment designed to determine the extent to which intelligence information needs have been satisfied by recent collection and reporting. This process builds directly upon the Human Resource Committee's practice (through FOCUS and HUMINT assessment seminars) of a evaluation using joint collector/producer/user meetings. [REDACTED]

2. The process began with a review of existing collection requirements and a listing of information needs. These needs were linked with national priorities and individual collection discipline priorities, as well as with a review of reporting. An interagency seminar of analysts, users, and collection managers was convened, chaired by the responsible National Intelligence Officer, to address the totality of intelligence collection reporting against information needs. Based on the seminar, a report of findings and recommendations was prepared for consideration by the collection discipline offices. A report of the actions actually taken by these offices in response is included. [REDACTED]

3. The all-source assessment process is intended to complement existing organizational arrangements for influencing intelligence collection and reporting. A primary objective is to strengthen the informal organization by providing an opportunity for analysts and policy officials to express their needs directly to their counterparts in the various collection disciplines and to explain how collection changes can improve the quality of intelligence analysis and support. The second major objective is to elicit analyst/user judgments about the roles which the collection disciplines are expected to play in providing needed information. The IC Staff collection offices,
